1. Background. It has been found that the present of 1983 ignoff on project review forms (i.e. the simple statement that permends approval, renewal or termination of a project) does not provide higher echelons, particularly COPS, sufficient information for final evaluation of the project. At this final stage, when the evaluations and recommendations of all interested components are weighed, favorable but unexplained recommendations must be balanced against unfavorable ones, for which reasons are ordinarily given. The result may be, knext for example, that an unfavorable production evaluation may carry unjustified whight, if the operational reasons for a favorable recommendation by CI Starf are not expressed. It is recognized that

2. The function of the specialized staff in project evaluation is to examine and concent constructively upon those factors of a project lying in its special field. CI Staff as a whole, therefore, is to given an am of the CI content, operational technique, and project; share is to contribute a similar evaluation on those recommended action, in line with the discussion in the above paragraphs.

It is expected that in most cases the required comments will be brief enough to fit into the "Comments and Recommendations" section of the project review form. If more detailed analysis is necessary, a memorandum may be attached. Depending on the circumstances, this may be addressed either to the area dask concerned or to the proper and both he and the area desk should be given copies. The appropriate will be responsible for collating the comments and recommendation of CI Staff components, and forwarding to FI/Projects the CI Staff position on the project.

4. The emphasis in the foregoing on explicit statement of the positive contributions of the project is not intended to discourage reviewing officers from criticism of the project. It is more common, however, that a negative critique of a project has the explained in writing, whereas it has previously been believed sufficient to state only the conclusion of a favorable analysis. It also remains a desirable practice to discuss with the area desk concerned the results of your review of the project, and when necessary to work out with the desk remedial action, in line with staff responsibility for guidance and assistance in specialized operational activity—
